Amanda Wilson oversees multiple projects at Active Living Research, and contributes to the communication, dissemination and capacity-building efforts of the program. Amanda manages ALR’s special supplement journals, provides technical assistance to grantees and plays a lead role in the coordination of ALR’s webinars. Amanda also plays a key role in coordinating ALR’s annual conference, which convenes researchers, advocates and policymakers from a wide variety of disciplines to present and learn the latest advancements on environmental and policy issues related to physical activity. She is an advocate in her own community for safer bicycling and pedestrian facilities and rides her bike to work (almost) daily.
